Creating illustrations for the fairy tale „The Magic of the Tree”

In the enchanted forest Lorus lives a majestic tree with particular branches, different from all the others. His name is Wallace but every day he feels sad because no tree wants to be his friend and they make fun of his branches. In fact, they are crooked, intertwined, bare and do not allow it to do the things that all other trees do.

From a distant tree, a shiny leaf detaches itself, which flies waving towards the tree Wallace and rests on its bark. Suddenly, the bark lights up in a precise point, in the center of the tree, where a precious stone appears: a brilliant golden gem and it is its heart.

One day the sky turns gray and black, the clouds cover everything and, suddenly, an impetuous gust of wind moves all the branches of the trees, bending them to the right and to the left, except those of Wallace, which are so sturdy and strong to remain motionless and still.

Suddenly the storm ends, the branches of Wallace begin to twist and straighten and its branches are filled with leaves and flowers, just like all the other trees in the enchanted forest.

From that day on, the tree Wallace became everyone's best friend.
